

President George W. Bush reports for jury duty

By Deena Zaru, CNN

Updated 4:18 PM ET, Wed August 5, 2015

- It's not uncommon for high-profile politicians to be called for jury duty

Just call him Juror Number 43.

A group of potential jurors in Dallas Wednesday morning who reported to fulfill their civic duty were joined by a most unexpected fellow citizen: former President George W. Bush.

"President Bush received his jury summons and reported for service this morning at the George Allen Courts Building in Dallas," Freddy Ford, a Bush spokesman, told CNN in a statement. "He sat through the jury selection panel for a case in Judge Eric Moyer's court on the 14th civil district but -- surprise! -- was not picked to serve as a juror. He was there for about three hours and posed for photos with other jury candidates, judges, and court staff."

Desiree' Bryant, of Dallas, tweeted a photo with the former president, writing, "Look who I just met doing Jury Duty! #POTUS"

A judge of the 101st District Court, Staci Williams, tweeted "At least my interns have fun! Pres. George Bush Jr. was at the courthouse today. Jury duty is required of all!"

And others shared photos on Twitter as well.

It's not uncommon for high-profile politicians to be called for jury duty.

In April, Chief Justice John Roberts was summoned to jury duty and was seen at the Montgomery County courthouse in Maryland, performing his civic duty as a potential juror for a car crash case. Vice President Joe Biden also reported for jury duty in Delaware on January 2011 but was not selected to serve.

Follow

Desiree' Bryant @desiree_bryant

Look who I just met doing Jury Duty! #POTUS

12:19 PM - 5 Aug 2015